Leeds Beckett University, which is known for its acceptance of very diverse political views, has issued an open letter to students to announce that it will start banning 'hate speech' on campus for the 2018-2019 academic year. Noting that under Britain's law (section 5 of the Public Order Act), campus bans of 'hate speech' have been legal since 1997, the university's board has released a set of guidelines that will be strictly enforced on campus. On university property, the school board has noted that students are free to express their views on 'a wide range of issues' without fear of reprisal,
