right way, but they did it in a way that made the victims suffer - no formal complaint process or disciplinary action - nothing. Just, "something happened", and the servers are gone. They can't even say what it was about, despite this being a pretty significant one (their public-facing servers were suddenly disappearing for a month). They haven't bothered even updating their status page, for the first time since their inception. This is a fraud, completely, with one exception: we have no idea what the sex was, or who the victims are. It's basically an anonymous, heh, assault. It's not even an assault with severe physical harm or a threat against their life, it's more of a dirty, pindrop sex between two people who had nothing better to do. It's a very similar scenario to what movie producers use to get victims and fall people to do pornographic movies. These people had nothing better to do but play around with a video chat service. They had their IP addresses, and the money (their ISP bill) for the
